What would the world be like if nuclear war between the USA and the USSR had occurred? What if the survivors had found a way to use radioactivity as a power source? Nevada, 1987. 10 years after the end of nuclear war, the country has been rebuilt. Thousands of civilians are still irradiated. Fortunately, the government developed a treatment called G.H.O.S.T. (Gray-Human-Omegon-Synthetized-Treatment). By using it, a human being can not only slow down the effects of radiation to his body; he can control it. The Erynies are humans that can use G.H.O.S.T. to activate such incredible abilities.

23-year-old Kama is a low-ranked bounty hunter who runs a slum where irradiated people are too poor to afford the G.H.O.S.T. treatment. His primary objective is to hunt Erynies.

One day, he is asked to capture Ananke, a young, female leader of an extremist group responsible for stealing an H-bomb from a military base. Detonating the stolen bomb could mean the end to the planet's fragile peace. But with a 50 million dollar bounty, Kama will not be the only one looking for Ananke: he must compete with the greatest bounty hunters to get her.
